I. OVERVIEW

I.1 Invitation to Respond to this Request for Proposal (RFP)

Australian Pork Limited (APL) invites suitably qualified consultants (Respondents) to respond to this Request for Proposal (RFP) for the provision of a report to identify where peri-urban sprawl is occurring near to, or in the vicinity of, existing piggeries across Australia. The report should also identify areas where producers should carefully consider how they proceed when developing a piggery and to facilitate industry solutions to emergent hotspots for development.

I.2 Project Overview

The Australian pork industry is dedicated to producing environmentally sustainable and competitively priced pork while maintaining natural resources. Fundamental to achieving this requires that the pork industry collaborate with key industry and government stakeholders and to ensure that pork producers are aware of, and meet, industry best practice across a range of areas including health, biosecurity, food safety and the environment. This includes meeting all relevant Federal and state agency policies and regulations by ensuring industry specific risks are addressed at both the planning and operational level.

In the case of planning, this is supported by a robust and proactive research, development and extension program that continually reviews and updates management practices based on the latest science and technologies. It is this science that underpins the pork industry's guidelines, the National Environmental Guidelines for Indoor Piggeries (NEGIP 2018) and the National Environmental Guidelines for Outdoor Production (NEGROP 2013).

An emerging issue with the potential for significant industry disruption is that of population growth and the expectation of a higher standard of living which is leading to urban encroachment and the convergence of the urban-rural interface. This is resulting in an iterative loss of strategically valuable agricultural lands across most states and territories. This issue is discussed in the 2016 report produced for the development of the National Broadband Network, Super connected lifestyle locations – The rise of the 'e-change' movement.

Currently, the planning system and laws favour urban development over agriculture because the planning system does not prioritise agriculture as a land use, meaning urban sprawl into existing and potential farmland continues relatively unchecked. Instead, planning tends to focus on whichever use has the greatest economic value. This is often considered under a short-term approach rather than the long-term economic and social contribution provided by agriculture – including pig production.

Where possible, policies and planning mechanisms have been established to protect and maintain remaining areas of agricultural land on the peri-urban boundary, with all states and territories having specific legislation to enable spatial land-use planning. Despite this, there is ongoing pressure for the sale of this agricultural land and consequently an increase in land-use conflicts, particularly in relation to amenity issues such as odour, dust, noise, vehicle movements and more.

Urban and peri-urban expansion into greenfield sites is also having an impact on high-value agricultural land around non-capital cities. This is having a direct impact on the pig industry as pig production is often located near urban centres for access to markets and distribution hubs. Encroachment of peri-urban development on these areas can result in pressure on growers to change or cease farming and also poses a significant biosecurity risk to existing producers.

As demand for agricultural products increases there is a growing recognition of the need to address the issue of urban encroachment on agricultural land. As such, some jurisdictions are imposing tighter controls on land releases. One such example is a State Policy on the Protection of Agricultural Land (2009) in Tasmania, which aims to conserve and protect agricultural land so that it remains available for the sustainable use and development of agriculture, recognising the particular importance of prime agricultural land and the role agriculture plays to the local and broader economy.

An issue demonstrating one of the flaws of the current planning system that may well arise as a result of peri-urban encroachment is the approval process for a development application (e.g. for a piggery) for a greenfield site or expansion of an existing site. Local councils that have received the development application for a piggery are often consenting to development applications lodged post the application for the piggery which then have the potential to affect the (first lodged) piggery application. This provides the opportunity for the approved development to impact on the modelling assessment of the piggery, and therefore the decision-making process. This approach facilitates vexatious development applications to be made simply to undermine the original application, particularly when there is no genuine intention to develop.

In order to inform industry of this emerging issue and to better influence the regulatory planning processes affecting the pork sector, the project proposes to commission a thorough and independent report on where peri-urban sprawl is occurring near to, or in the vicinity of, existing piggeries, and an analysis of the future potential hotspot areas through peri-urban encroachment over the next twenty years. It is also expected the report will identify areas where proponents should carefully consider the suitability of piggery developments (“the Project”).

Proponents may respond to this RFP independently or in partnership with the ‘Cost to Business – Regulatory Impacts and Planning Processes’ project.

Commencement date: 25 February 2019.

Completion and final report delivered by 31 May 2019.

All Respondents' proposals will be evaluated against the same evaluation criteria and will be rated by consultancy expertise, proposed price and ability to deliver the required report within the required timeframes.

On completion of the initial evaluation APL may, at its discretion, request selected Respondents to make a presentation to APL in respect of their RFP and other relevant selection criteria.

APL shall advise Respondents not selected for further consideration as soon as practicable.

4.2.3 Stage Three – Selection of successful Respondent

- b. discussions with clients of some or all Respondents' referees.

APL may make independent enquiries about any of the matters that may be relevant to the evaluation of any proposal.

4.4 Evaluation Criteria

The evaluation criteria are listed below and are divided into:

- a. mandatory (Pass/Fail) criteria and
- b. comparative assessment criteria.

4.4.1 Mandatory Criteria

APL will exclude a proposal from further consideration if APL, at its absolute discretion, considers that the proposal does not pass the mandatory criteria. For the purposes of this RFP, APL has defined as mandatory criteria the:

- a. conditions of RFP in Section 3 of this RFP and
- b. provision of required information in Section 5 of this RFP.

4.4.2 Comparative Assessment Criteria

Respondents should note that the evaluation criteria are not listed in order of importance.

- a. methodology criteria: the degree to which a Respondent proposes to gather market intelligence and information for the cost benefit analysis to meet the Statement of Requirements in Schedule I
- b. pricing criteria: the whole of life cost to APL of the proposal, determined by APL, from the proposal. APL may normalise prices in proposals to form a basis for comparison between proposals
- c. corporate/risk criteria: the Respondent's corporate and financial capability to deliver the Project and any risks identified in the proposal.

4.5 Debriefing

Unsuccessful Respondents may, after they have been notified in writing that they have been unsuccessful, request a debriefing from APL representative(s). At its absolute discretion, APL may provide a debriefing to a Respondent at such time and in such manner as APL considers appropriate.
